Students from across Europe raise awareness about risks of air pollution Voltia announces the top 10 entries in its Air Pollution Challenge

Bratislava - 100 entries were received in Voltia's youth contest to raise awareness about air pollution, in the lead up to Earth Day. The top 10 entries were released yesterday on Voltia's facebook page to be shared widely, and the top prize winners will be announced at 10 AM CET on Earth Day – April 22, 2017.

Voltia offered the contest through Challengest, a platform which reveals young high potentials to great companies. Challengest invites both companies to create challenges for young people, and its vast network of students to provide solutions to those challenges. It helps companies solve problems they have, provides professional experiences for young people, and creates connections between them, hopefully leading to future employment opportunities.

Voltia Challenge was a part of a special social challenge project that opens a discussion about social problems (as unemployment, financial literacy, environment, health, education) and that wants to activate young people to think about solutions for these problems. Contestants were young people from all across Europe and were asked to think about air pollution in their community, and to create a social media post to help raise awareness about it.
